

ARGUS 13. OCT. 93

CAPE/NATIONAL

EINA! One of a group of six newly arrived "quaggas-in-the-making" lashed out at a companion after they were released to join four others already established at the Rhodes Estate above Mowbray yesterday. The zebras, specially selected for their markings, were transferred from the Vrolijkheid nature reserve near Robertson last week as part of the Quagga Project's long-term programme to re-breed the extinct animal — now known to be a sub-species of plains zebra and not a separate species as originally believed.

Picture: HANNES THIART,
The Argus.